Every winter, many people in Denmark are affected by flu. The flu is highly contagious. Some years, up to 20% of the population can be affected by the disease, which can become life-threatening, especially for individuals with certain health conditions.

The best way to avoid getting flu is to have a flu vaccine.

There are very few side effects of flu vaccination, and the most common side effects are temporary swelling and tenderness at the injection site, as well as mild fever or headache. These side effects usually disappear within 1-2 days.

You can read more about flu vaccination on the Health Authority's website: <https://www.sst.dk/da/influenza>.

We look forward to helping you take better care of each other during the flu season.

Best regards
